Discussion

WARM-UP

1. Where were you reading this book, and did you ever have to put it down just to take a breath?
2. Did you race through it or savor it slowly? What was your reading routine like with this one?

DIGGING IN

1. The book lingers on the little performances we put on for the people we love. Which small moment felt most familiar or tender to you?
2. Midwestern small-town life is almost a character here. How did the setting feel to you, comforting, suffocating, or somewhere in between?
3. The story plays with the idea of a 'Cool Girl' (or guy) we pretend to be early in relationships. Was there a version of yourself you once performed that you feel warmly or wryly about now?
4. Anniversaries, scavenger hunts, little rituals: which traditions in your own life feel sweet, and which feel like a lot of pressure?

GOING DEEP

1. Without spoiling anything, how did the book leave you feeling when you closed it, unsettled, satisfied, oddly cozy? What stuck with you the next morning?
2. The novel asks how well we can really know another person. Was there a moment that made you think kindly, or warily, about the long quiet work of staying close to someone?

☕ On the table & to sip

TO EAT

🍲 Midwestern hotdish casserole

A warm, bubbly nod to the book's small-town Missouri setting and church-potluck comfort

🍷 Crusty grilled cheese with tomato soup shooters

The kind of bar-and-diner food Nick's pub might serve on a chilly night

🍲 Brown sugar bread pudding with caramel

Sweet, nostalgic, and a soft landing after a tense read

TO SIP

🍷 Bourbon hot toddy

A nod to Nick's bar, warm and slow-sipping for late-night theorizing

☕ Spiked spiced cider

Cozy Missouri autumn in a mug

☕ Vanilla chamomile steamer (no alcohol)

Soothing and caffeine-free for the readers who need to sleep after this one

Run of show

7:00

Soft arrivals

Greet guests in slippers-welcome mode. Warm drinks ready, playlist low.

7:15

Settle in with hotdish

Plate up comfort food and let people chat freely before formal questions.

7:35

Warm-up questions

Start with the two warmups to ease everyone in. No pressure, no 'right' takes.

7:55

Theme round

Pull theme questions from a basket so it feels playful rather than school-ish.

8:30

Dessert and deep questions

Bring out the bread pudding before the deeper questions. Sweet softens hard topics.

Trivia, scorecards, and goodbyes

Wrap with light trivia and bookmarks to take home.

HOST TIPS

- Keep lighting low: lamps and candles only. It makes even tense talk feel safe.
- Put a blanket basket by the couch so guests can literally settle in.
- If conversation drifts dark, steer back to personal feeling, not plot dissection.
