

BOOK CLUB NIGHT KIT

To Kill a Mockingbird

Harper Lee

☾ COZY NIGHT

A tender, front-porch story about childhood, conscience, and small-town life in 1930s Alabama that opens up gentle, heartfelt conversation.

Porch Light On, Pot's Warm

Come curl up for a cozy evening with Scout, Atticus, and a table full of southern comfort. Soft sweaters and second helpings encouraged.

Reading level: Moderate

Best for: Clubs that love classic novels and slow, soulful conversation by lamplight

Discussion

WARM-UP

1. What was the weather, snack, or spot where you did most of your reading, and how did it shape your mood with the book?
2. Which small moment in Maycomb made you smile or feel a pang of nostalgia for somewhere in your own past?

DIGGING IN

1. Scout's voice has a particular warmth. How did her way of telling the story make you feel as you read?
2. Atticus offers a lot of quiet wisdom. Was there a line or idea of his that landed softly with you, maybe reminding you of someone who raised or guided you?
3. The Finch household, Calpurnia's kitchen, the porch, the treehouse: which setting felt most like a place you'd want to sit a while, and why?
4. Boo Radley becomes a figure of childhood mystery. Was there a 'Boo' in your own neighborhood growing up, and how do you feel about that memory now?

GOING DEEP

1. This book asks us to walk in someone else's skin. When in your life has trying that, even briefly, changed how you felt about a person or a situation?
2. Looking back on the whole story, what feeling did it leave you with as you closed the cover, and what do you want to carry from it into the week ahead?

☕ On the table & to sip

TO EAT

Buttermilk biscuits with honey butter

A southern porch staple, warm and comforting like Calpurnia's kitchen

Slow-baked mac and cheese

Homey 1930s Alabama comfort food, perfect for second helpings

Warm peach cobbler with vanilla ice cream

Georgia is close by, and peaches feel like a southern summer evening

TO SIP

Sweet iced tea with lemon and mint (no alcohol)

The unofficial drink of every southern porch

Spiced apple cider, warm (no alcohol)

Cozy, hand-warming, gentle on the conversation

Bourbon hot toddy

A grown-up nightcap with that slow southern warmth

HOST TIPS

- Keep lighting low and lamp-warm; candles and throw blankets make people open up
- Let silences breathe. This vibe rewards slow thinking over quick answers
- Have copies of the questions on small cards so shy guests can read theirs aloud

🎵 Playlist

Soft southern folk and acoustic Americana, like a screen door creaking at dusk
